

Peekaboo Needs a Friend

Fivephones introduces One More Drop, an original game for smartphones using the Android platform.

Hnátnice, 18 January 2013 – Fivephones, a family business from the tiny town of Hnátnice, has launched One More Drop, an original Czech game for phones using Android 2.2 or higher versions, now available at Google Play. Players have to get through 72 levels requiring both dexterity and logical skill, guiding a drop of water among various obstacles to a place where a new friend can grow for the character of Peekaboo. The game is controlled by tilting the phone, and players may create their own personalized levels.

About the Game

Players are required to grow a friend for the character of Peekaboo, a tiny sprite living in the grass and feeding on pure water. Players guide a water droplet through a host of obstacles to the right place. Once the water drops close enough to the target, a new friend will grow. The game is based on the laws of physics: the water droplet evaporates in contact with a hot obstacle, and steam rises up. It changes state again once it runs into a cold barrier, drops down or freezes, and so on.

Game Control

Players control the water droplet by tilting the phone left and right. Touch control is also available. Players may browse directly through the game levels. Each package contains 9 levels, with titles such as Sly Rungs, Damned Slow Traverse, A Bustle of Niddy Noddies, etc. Each level equals a single screen. The easiest levels are suitable for approximately 5-year-old children. There is no upper age limit. The game allows creating up to five player accounts on one phone, so the whole family can play even if only one of them has an Android-operated phone. Before selecting a player account, the game displays the high scores achieved by all players, and a table showing three best online players within the previous three weeks. The game has an original graphic design, and offers an English, German, or Czech language version.

Creating Additional Levels

Players are expected to do more than just passively follow the pre-programmed obstacles; they may design their own game levels. Newly created levels can be saved online and made available for other users.
